“You’re Still Here?”

It can be embarrassing to find that you’ve stuck around somewhere longer than wanted, to the point that people are wondering why you’re still there. That’s bad enough if you’re a houseguest, but it can be really bad if you’re an organization like ours.

Christian Life Resources came into existence 40 years ago (we formed in 1983 as WELS Lutherans for Life, and changed our name in 1999), and some people do actually wonder why we’re still around. After last summer’s Dobbs decision from the Supreme Court, some have the impression that the fight against abortion is mostly won, but others view “pro-life” as a concern that belongs to the past – whether we “won” or “lost” doesn’t really matter, because times have changed.

But we are not embarrassed at all to still be here, because the work we do – for life, for families, for the church, for you – is probably even more vital today than it was 40 years ago. Our areas of service have expanded far beyond the network of pregnancy care centers that we started with, and it’s precisely because times have changed that we now address a wide range of issues that churches, schools, called workers, and laity all are facing – issues that college and seminary, let alone catechism instruction, have hardly prepared anyone for. While the basic biblical principles regarding a so-called “right to die,” same-sex attraction, “gender fluidity,” and stewardship of the body might be easy to articulate, it can be a challenge to apply them to our people’s particular situations in this constantly changing culture.

And that’s what Christian Life Resources is here to help with. We do the research you might not have time for, and we educate, equip, and organize believers who want to stand with God and his people for life and against the culture of death, for truth against the devil’s lies, and for God’s design for sex and marriage against society’s corruptions.

So if you haven’t checked us out lately, please do. Peruse christianliferesources.com, listen to the Life Challenges podcast, download materials for planning a Life Sunday or a special Bible class, get help with a thorny bioethical question, or invite one of us to present to your congregation, conference, or school on a topic of particular interest. We’re here to serve and to help you make a difference in people’s lives. We encourage you to contact us at any time, and see the next page for resources you can use right now.
